Cutting cake and carbon

A Vancouver couple will be rolling into Burnaby for their wedding celebrations, eco-friendly and in style. Farah Nazarali and Dustin Anderson, both avid cyclists originally from Burnaby, turned a gigantic tricycle into a "luxury, pedal-powered vehicle."

"This is perfect for us, it's absolutely perfect," said Nazarali, the bride-to-be who originally resisted the idea of pedalling in a wedding dress. "It's fun and our wedding is all about fun."

The couple arranged for a friend to chauffeur them around, while they relax in the cushioned back seats, plush with fabric lining. They will arrive via eco-limo at the Scandinavian Community Centre for a pre-wedding celebration on Aug. 30.

Anderson took his grandmother for a test drive before the ceremonies.

"She loved it, she felt like a queen," he said, adding he got a lot of thumbs-up signs from onlookers.

Afterwards, the two plan on renting their limo to others.

"If someone wants to have an eco-grad, it just makes sense," Anderson said.
